

Tables and figures

---

Tables

2.1	Comparing the electoral rules for house and senate elections in sixteen countries, circa 1990	page 22
2.2	Comparing the number and effective number of parties winning seats in the house and senate of sixteen countries, circa 1990	24
2.3	Comparing the number and effective number of parties winning votes in the house and senate races of sixteen countries, circa 1990	25
3.1	Voting options in 77 democracies	45
3.2	District structures in 77 democracies	50
3.3	Median magnitudes of primary electoral districts in 72 democracies	55
4.1	Loss of votes by small German parties in constituency contests, relative to list contests	83
9.1	The law of conservation of disproportionality: Japan, 1960-90	176
9.2	Predicting the number of parties: Japan, 1960-90	177
11.1	The determinants of the effective number of legislative parties in 54 democracies, circa 1985	215
11.2	The determinants of the effective number of electoral parties in 51 democracies, circa 1985	215
11.3	The determinants of the effective number of presidential candidates in 16 democracies, circa 1985	216
11.4	Predicting the number of parties in Japan, 1960-90	216
11.5	Predicting the effective number of parties in Japan, 1960-90	217
13.1	Average seats won by conservatives and noncommunist opposition in Japan, 1958-90	246
13.2	Average seats won by KMT and DPP in Taiwan, 1992	248

Tables and figures

Figures

4.1	Testing the bimodality hypothesis in moderately close districts: British elections, 1983-1992	87
4.2	Testing the bimodality hypothesis in districts that were not closely contested: British elections, 1983-1992	87
4.3	Testing the bimodality hypothesis in very close districts: British elections, 1983-1992	88
5.1	Testing the bimodality hypothesis in 3-seat districts: Japanese lower house elections, 1958-1990	104
5.2	Testing the bimodality hypothesis in 4-seat districts: Japanese lower house elections, 1958-1990	104
5.3	Testing the bimodality hypothesis in 5-seat districts: Japanese lower house elections, 1958-1990	105
5.4	Testing the bimodality hypothesis in low-turnover districts: Japanese lower house elections, 1960-1993	106
5.5	Testing the bimodality hypothesis in high-turnover districts: Japanese lower house elections, 1960-1993	107
5.6	Testing the bimodality hypothesis in low-magnitude districts: Colombian lower house elections, 1974-1990	113
9.1	Conserving disproportionality	174
11.1	A schematic representation of the relationship between social cleavages, rules of election, and number of competitors in presidential and legislative elections	211
14.1	The battle of London	263