It has been a long journey since I had what I now recognize to be the first inkling of the idea behind this book's argument during my first year in Graduate School. The journey since then was often difficult and always challenging. But, at the end of the process, I am hopeful and optimistic that the book achieves some of the things that I set out to do many years ago. However, this is only the case because a large number of people have helped me along the way.

This means, first of all, my dissertation adviser Karen Remmer. She always managed to find just the right balance between pushing me and giving me space to develop the project at my own pace while being encouraging and supportive throughout. She is an ideal adviser. The same is true for the other members of my dissertation committee. Erik Wibbels' probing questions and sharp comments have improved the book greatly, and his guidance during the publication process has been invaluable. Pablo Beramendi's advice on everything ranging from this book to Galician vacations has been essential. I benefited greatly from the substantial and technical expertise of Daniel Gingerich. Addressing the comments and suggestions he made at my dissertation defense kept me busy for a long time. Finally, Michael Ward has supported me in more ways than I can count, and the generosity he displayed as a mentor sets the example that I try to emulate in my own career. Mike, I wish you could read these lines, but trust that you are in a better place now.

I spent time at three different institutions while working on this book. At each of them, I have been extremely fortunate to have had colleagues who read parts or all of the manuscript, who engaged in conversations about it, who provided constructive feedback, or who were (and still are) great friends. At Duke, I thank John Aldrich, Melina Altamirano, Laia Balcells, Andy Ballard, Ben Barber, Kyle Beardsley, Andy Beger, Tim Büthe, Cindy Cheng, Scott de Marchi, Chris DeSante, Cassy Dorff, Idil Edes Gallop, Max Gallop, Ana Guzman, Florian Hollenbach, Aaron Houck, Libby Jenke, Bill Keech, Aaron King, Herbert Kitschelt, Dan Krčmaric, Anh Le, Howard Liu, Fengming Lu, Bahar Leventoglu, Eddy Malesky, Nils Metternich, Shahryar Minhas, Michael Munger, Noa On, Frank Orlando, Vicky Paniagua, Brittany Perry, Jan Pierskalla, Guadalupe Rojo, Arturas Rozenas, Greg Schober, Anna Schultz, David Soskice, Danielle Thomsen, Will Wittels, and Sean Zeigler.

At the Carlos III-Juan March Institute, I am grateful to Diana Dakhallah, Pablo Fernández-Vázquez, Robert Fishman, Gema García Albacete, Sebastián Lavezzolo, Mark Manger, Luis Fernando Medina, Magdalena Nebreda, Lluís Orriols, Javier Polavieja, Jonas Radl, Andrew Richards, Pedro Riera, Ignacio Sánchez-Cuenca, Pablo Simón, and Marga Torre.

At Syracuse, I benefited from comments and advice by Lamis Abde-laaty, David Arceneaux, Matt Cleary, Margarita Estevez-Abe, Chris Faricy, Shana Gadarian, Ryan Griffiths, Dimitar Gueorguiev, Erin Hern, Seth Jolly, Audie Klotz, Sarah Mawhorter, Dan McDowell, Kathy Michelmore, Glyn Morgan, Tessa Murphy, Elise Roberts, Michah Rothbart, Brian Taylor, Danielle Thomsen (again), Emily Thorson, Steven White, Matt Young, and Yael Zeira.

Miriam Golden and David Samuels were gracious enough to participate in my book manuscript workshop at Syracuse University. They both read the entire draft and provided detailed comments, which improved the book in many, many ways.

During my fieldwork in India, I benefited from interactions with, among others, Sanjeer Alam, Anil Bairwal and his team at the Association for Democratic Reforms, Laveesh Bhandari, Prasana Dash, Dhananjai Joshi, Nimah Mazaheri, Jesim Pais, Seema Sahai, E. Sridharan, Paranjay Guha Thakurta, and Yogendra Yadav.

Over the course of the years, I've been lucky to receive feedback on parts of the book from many people in the discipline, including Ben Ansell, Lorena Becerra, Cristina Bodea, Julie Browne, Jennifer Bussell, Simon Chauchard, Ray Duch, Benjamin Egerod, Andrew Eggers, Alexander Fourniaies, Nikhar Gaikwad, Jessica Gottlieb, Kenneth Greene, Charles Hankla, Alex Hirsch, James Hollyer, Francesca Jensenius, Paul Kellstedt, Marko Klačnja, Kendra Koivu, Avital Livny, Ana Luiza Melo Aranha, Didac Queralt, David Rueda, Luis Schiumerini, Joel Simmons, Alberto Simpser, Abby Wood, Hye Young You, and Thomas Zeitzoff. I also thank conference participants at various editions of the annual meetings of the American Political Science Association, the European Political Science Association, and the Midwest Political Science Association, and seminar participants at Duke University, New York University, University of Konstanz, and Nuffield College/University of Oxford.

Parts of this book are revisions of published material. Portions of Chapter 5 appeared in Weschle, Simon. 2021. "Campaign Finance Legislation and the Supply-Side of the Revolving Door." Political Science Research and Methods, 9(2): 365–379 (Cambridge University Press). Parts of Chapter 7 were published in Weschle, Simon. 2016. "Punishing Personal and Electoral Corruption: Experimental Evidence from India." Research and Politics, 3(2): 1–6 (Sage Journals).

I am thankful to the anonymous reviewers at Cambridge University Press for their suggestions, Robert Dreesen and Sara Doskow for their editorial guidance, as well as Cameron Daddis and Jadyn Fauconier-Herry for their editorial assistance. Kelley Friel copy-edited this book, and her 9,339 revisions and suggestions vastly improved its readability. Many thanks also to the Longform podcast, which has been a weekly companion throughout the writing process. Hearing much better writers struggle with many of the same issues as I did was reassuring.

On a personal note, I would like to thank my parents. They are my biggest champions and have supported me enthusiastically and unwaveringly, even if that meant that their son lives more than 4,000 miles away. As a small token of gratitude, this book is dedicated to them. Finally, I can't put into words how grateful I am to my wife Allison and my daughter Nina, so I won't even try. They have had to put up with me the most while I was writing this book; they are the most important people in my life; and my greatest thank you of all goes to them.
